So you've set the date for your bridal appointment at Something Blue—the next step is deciding who your ultimate 'say yes' party is! It can be such a tough and overwhelming decision—you might think you want everyone there, but that might not be the best choice.

Family

Whether it's your parents, siblings, grandparents or extended family, it's essential to have close family members involved through this important (and exciting!) decision process.

Bridal party

Considering they're in your wedding, why wouldn't they be there when you make the single most important decision of the whole event? Having your most important people there will only allow for more "ooo's" and "ahh's" when you come out in different dresses.

Your fiancé's family or part of it

Now, this doesn't mean their entire family, but maybe their sister, or their mother. If of course, you feel comfortable having them there. Inviting them to your bridal appointment is a very sentimental gesture.

Less is more

Remember, less is more. Too many opinions from too many people at your appointment can make for a stressful and overwhelming overall process. The goal is to be shedding tears of joy when picking out your wedding dress, not tears of stress!

Please note, you may bring up to 4 guests to your bridal appointment.
